Credit Bureaus are selling you out!

Opt out to avoid telemarketers

Having your credit checked is an important and necessary step in the home buying process, as well as something that is done on a regular basis for various other reasons. Very few people realize that each time their credit is checked, the "inquiry data" that the credit bureaus (Equifax, TransUnion, Innovis or Experian) has on file has now become a commodity. This information is being sold by the credit bureaus to other lenders... and also to companies that sell and resell the same names and personal information.

That's right - the credit bureaus have found a way to increase their revenues at your expense... and without your permission. These "inquiry leads" include name, address, phone numbers (including unlisted), credit score, current debt and debt history, property information, age, gender and estimated income. They are selling your personal, confidential information to competing creditors and making millions.

The good news is that you can make it stop, and right away. The consumer credit reporting industry has provided a way to "opt out" and remove your name from these lists. You can contact them by phone at 888-567-8688 or online at optoutprescreen.com. You must opt out at least 48 hours prior to having your credit checked to make sure it is processed in time.

Bonus: Opting out will also protect you from "pre- approved credit" offers arriving via mail. They are one of the leading causes of identity theft in the U.S.
